PORK PICKIN'S
Appomattox Pork Producers

The Appomattox Pork Producers will meet at the County Extension Office on Tuesday, June 25th, at 7:30 p.m. It is very important that all members make a special effort to be present. Many items of business are in need of immediate action.

This week the hog market showed a slight uptrend, but the hog-corn ratio remained below 9.5 which is still not all profitable.

The feeder Pig Markets are under extreme price pressure and large numbers of sows are now being slaughtered even though sow prices are also extremely low.

With the over supplies of pork on the market one wonders why intelligent producers continue to market heavyweight hogs. Certainly there is nothing but loss in carrying hogs over 200 lbs. This week's slaughter weight showed that the average live weight of hogs marketed was 246 pounds, and that's a lot of extra pork and fat on the market.

If producers would lower the average market weight to that of 215 pounds that would reduce the total amount of pork produced by 48,112,000 pound per week or approximately 12 per cent of the total pork produced. This is equivalent to taking 223,776 head of 215 pound hog off the market. This normal decrease in pork supply would certainly help increase prices in liveweight hogs.

Mr. Irby Coleman of Trenton, Tenn., puts it this way:

"Why should we give the packers and retailers cheap pork to put in cold storage just to keep the price depressed? Reports indicate that the red meat in cold storage is at a 22 year record high.

I realize the first week or so the extra hogs coming on the market might depress it a little, but the decrease in the total pounds of pork produced in a short period of time would greatly improve the pork price situation. This is something that the pork producer can do for themselves, without having to rely on a handout from someone else."

New Graduate Program In Lynchburg

Plans are being completed to offer an off-campus Masters Degree program in Adult and Continuing Education in the Lynchburg area starting in September, 1974. The three year program will be conducted at the Central Virginia Community College.

It is designed for those people working in adult and continuing education who serve as administrators, supervisors, program developers, and teachers of adults. This would include VPI & SU Extension Agents and many people in public school systems, higher education, health and social services, business and industry, and churches.

The program is offered by the College of Education of VPI & SU, Blacksburg, Virginia. It should have particular appeal for those individuals who wish to pursue their formal education and who need to understand the pyschology of adult learning and behavioral science concepts which support adult education.

All courses will be taught at the CVCC campus. There are no residency, thesis, and comprehensive examination requirements. Courses are taught in three hour "blocks," one night per week, for a period of ten weeks each quarter.

A total of 45 credit hours is required for the Masters Degree. The projected schedule of classes calls for one course to be taught each quarter for three years. This would give a student 39 credit hours of work. The remaining six hours can be transferred credit or independent study. All participants in the program must be admitted to the Graduate School at VPI & SU.

Three "Tech" Students Get Law Passed By Va's General Assembly

A feeling that it wasn't right for a company to make a profit out of something that could cause a student to be put on probation or expelled led a trio of Virginia Tech students to persuade Virginia's General Assembly to pass a law forbidding commercial theme-writing companies to do business in the state.

The three--James S. Crockett Jr. of Welch, W. Va., Kenneth L. Hawkins of Appomattox and Susan G. Oliver of Red House--successfully led the campaign to make it a misdemeanor for such firms to solicit business within the state.

"We were accused of trying to legislate morality," Crockett said. The chief justice of Tech's honor court observed, "It wasn't right for the firm selling the term papers to get off free while we were in the process of trying the student for violating our honor system for using it."

Both Crockett and Hawkins credit Miss Oliver with getting the bill through the General Assembly. A legislative assistant to Del. Frank M. Slayton, a lawyer from South Boston, Miss Oliver constantly lobbied for the bill in Richmond.

In addition to Slayton, co-patrons included four other members of the House - Richard Cranwell of Vinton, Thomas J. Michie Jr. of Charlotte, James B. Murrary of Earlysville and Mrs. Eleanor P. Sheppard of Richmond. Mrs. Sheppard is chairman of the House Education Committee.

The work of the Tech students, after a slow start when it looked as if the bill would die in committee, paid off. The legislation, after it was reported out of committee, passed the House of Delegates 85-0 and the Senate 40-0.

The passed bill reads: "No person shall prepare, cause to be prepared, sell any term paper, thesis, dissertation or other written material for another person, for profit, with the knowledge, or under circumstances in which he should reasonably have known, that such term paper, thesis, dissertation or other written material is to be submitted by any other person for academic credit at any public or private college, university or other institution of hirher learning in this state.

"No person shall make or disseminate, with the intent to induce any other person to enter into any obligation relating thereto, any statement, written or oral, that he will prepare, cause to be prepared, any term paper, thesis, dissertation or other written material, to be sold for profit, for or on behalf of any person who has been assigned the written preparation of such term paper, thesis, dissertation or other written material for academic credit at any public or private college, university or other institution of higher learning in this state."

If found guilty of the misdemeanor, a fine not to exceed $1,000 can be imposed.

Miss Oliver said the problem concerning the companies preparing such work seemed to be growing. A number of them sent literature to the campus and were submitting ads to the student paper.

Since the use of such material is a strict violation of the University's honor code, theose concerned with the system were worried. The literature also was appearing at other colleges throughout the state.

Hawkins, who served as clerk of special affairs for Tech's honor system, contacted the students and administration at the University of Virginia, George Mason University and Mary Washington College and got their backing through letters to their representatives in the General Assembly.

"Many of the delegates," Miss Oliver said, "were of the opinion that the bill was just for the state institutions. So Ken got busy letter writing again and gathered additional support from Hampden-Sydney, Longwood, Washington and Lee and the University of Richmond. Atty. Gen Andrew Miller also endorsed the bill."

Miss Oliver noted that the last endorsements seemed to sway the legislative committee and that once it was reported out, all went smoothly.

"It was the only bill that committee reported out during the session, " Miss Oliver said proudly.

A junior in political science, Miss Oliver hopes to work for Slayton another year, graduate and go to law school. Besides working with the legislature and the Tech Honor System, she is public relations co-director for the University's musical group, the New Virginians, and is on the panhellenic Council as the representative of Zeta Tau Alpha.

Hawkins, who plans to return to Tech and graduate school in the fall, is a June graduate in political science.

Crockett, the "man of the Year" in this year's graduating class, also plans to return to Tech this fall to get a master's degree in political science.
